The homosexual exit process is described by Vivienne Cass as a series of social stages that the individual is obliged to negotiate with the others (Devor 1997): a period of ³ identity confusion in which the person attempts to deny or resist the growing suspicion that he or she is homosexual; second, a period of comparison ³ the identity in the examines the range of identity options available to see which best explains your sense of self; third, a period of identity tolerance in which the person recognizes I am probably gay and seeks more information ³ contacts; fourth, a period of acceptance ³ identity in which the person carefully manages the sexual information or claims public recognition ³ his or her sexual identity; fifth, a period of identity pride in which the person strongly identifies with his or her reference group and minimizes the value of others; and sixth, a period of identity synthesis in which the person's sexuality naturalized, becoming Å no Å big thing. Of course, the transition ³ between these stages is not predetermined, and it is possible to remain trapped at one stage or even to go backwards. SociologÃa crÃtica SegÃn the sociologÃa crÃtica, society is structured by relations of power and domination ³ between social groups (for example, women versus men) that determine access to scarce resources.
